Being able to recognize and name feelings is the very first step in helping children manage their feelings. This game focuses on asking about and expressing emotions and feelings in English with four main sections. Try to remember where the pictures or words are. It's party time at Alma's house! Help the guests as they play games, eat, and dance! Print | Save as PDF | spelling game and question and answer games to learn English online. The 'Living With Feeling' project aims to use history and the humanities to help people articulate and move towards their own well-informed vision of emotional health. Celebrate Baby Margaret's birthday with Daniel and his family! Help Pinkalicious and Peter build houses in Fairyland! Help Muffy plan spectacular parties for her friends in Elwood city. A: How are you today? It works well in modern browsers. We recommend using Google Chrome. And it can give you the chance to talk with your child about all kinds of different feelings. Otherwise, they may find it quite difficult. For example "sad", there is a common, slightly positive greeting followed by the negative emotion: "OK, but I'm a little sad." In the grammar section there is some emphasis placed on learning English punctuation and grammar rules such as starting a sentence with a capital letter, contractions, usage of commas, and punctuation. Twelve of the cards have pictures and twelve of the cards have words. If the two cards don't match, they are turned face down again. Ready for Preschool: Feelings! Learn all about Feelings with the TOTS Baby Animals! © Disney, All Rights Reserved Welcome to our games page! We have developed two games as part of our research and schools projects - a card game designed to test and stretch your emotional vocabulary - and an online game about changing expressions of emotions through history. A: Is she hungry? Both can be enjoyed by children and adults of all ages! Play Emotionology: The Game of Feelings Play What Are They Feeling? There is a feelings vocabulary practice section and an emotions spelling section. Play hide and seek with Daniel and his family! Spin the wheel and sing songs with Daniel! Talk with a grown-up about what they were like as a kid with this interview helper. This game gives children a chance to play about what different feelings look like. Continue until you have twelve pairs. There is a new page with a short explanation about the games and exercises included in each topic --> check out the games page for those details. For a full list of the vocabulary and teaching materials to match these online vocabulary exercises, check out the links below: Update: Learn more about the badge system --> check out the badge page for information on how to earn badges, how to print badges, how teachers can use the badges in their classrooms. Play with Elmo and his friends at school. This game uses HTML5 and JavaScript. A: Are you hungry? B: Yes, I am./No, I'm not. Then, there are feeling games for conversation practice and games for listening practice. If they show the pair, the cards remain open. The Emotions Lab was made possible by support from the Wellcome Trust in the form of a Collaborative Award for the project 'Living With Feeling: Emotional Health in History, Philosophy, and Experience'. Share your thoughts Please note. Other notes: The spelling game will accept the vocabulary word as is "hungry" It's uncommon for English speakers to "complain" in casual greetings. So, in the question and answer section you'll see more natural answers for feelings and emotions that are negative in connotation. B: Yes, she is./No, she's not.
